 Book Condition: New. New. 192 x 130 mm. Language: English .
 Brand New Book. It was boxing that gave Johnny Owen his one positive means of self-expression .It is his tragedy that he found himself articulate in such a dangerous language - Hugh McIlvanney. In 1980, Johnny Owen held the Welsh, British, European and Commonwealth bantamweight titles. Nicknamed the Matchstick Man because of the skeletal physique which belied his stamina and aggression, Johnny was hugely popular. With his old-fashioned fighting style, honesty and charm, he was something to cheer about in an uncertain world and a climate of industrial decline. In the autumn of that year, Johnny made his bid for the World Championship, flying to Los Angeles to fight the skillful, arrogant champion, Lupe Pintor of Mexico. Most pundits considered Pintor unbeatable and Owen out of his depth. Many feared for his life, comparing his emaciated body and slow mind with the power and lightning-quick reflexes of the Mexican. Both the odds and the crowd were in favor of Pintor, but Owen had his father in his corner as his trainer, and he would produce one of the most courageous displays of bantamweight...
