Excerpt: . . . the gospel while others have embraced it, to renounce their enmity and opposition to Christ, to his gospel, and to his friends, and persist no longer in opposing a cause which is destined to triumph over all its enemies. It is vain to oppose God, and Christ, and all the friends of Christ. The gospel, under a divine influence, conquered three thousand one day, and five thousand another day; and is still able to conquer all in this place, as well as in any other. God may soon rend the heavens, and come down in all the majesty of his sovereignty, and bow the hearts of the most obstinate to the sceptre of Christ. Many of you who reject the gospel, have seen others in the day of divine power cordially embrace it. Thousands and millions of believers all over the Christian world are...
