MIT's Number One computer guru , according to Time Magazine, the author of this wry and witty book disparages the high-tech devices . computers, laptops, Web cell phones, digital organizers . that people have become so dependent upon . Far-seeing , he predicted that " In a few years, he warns, there will be 10 times as many of these "creatures biting at" us . He gives his vision of a time when " we alternate ample leisure with intellectually stimulating work, seamlessly integrated by technology that spares us the inconveniences of modern life. " . " The key, says Dertouzos, is "human-centric computing," technological devices that "talk with us, do things for us, get the information we want, help us work with other people, and adapt to our individual needs.
