Referring to the accompanying map, it will be seen that the normal rainfall throughout the littoral and a great portion of the mediterranean regions to the north of latitude 40. is ample for agricultural purposes, but in the andine districts the rainfall is so slight that only by means of irrigation is the cultivation of the soil rendered possible. The distribution of the annual rainfall is as variable as its geographical distribution. North of latitude 38 the year may be divided into two seasons: rainy and dry. The first comprises the months of October to March, and the second from April to September. This designation of seasons refers as much to the amount as to the frequency. In the littoral districts, the difference in the amount of rain that usually falls in these seasons is less marked in the southern section than in the northern. For example: in Buenos Aires 55 per cent of the annual amount falls in the rainy season, and in Corrientes 65 per cent. In the mediterranean region, which is well represented by the observations at Cordoba, the rainfall is 86 per cent in summer and 14 per cent in winter, while in Salta the difference is still greater, being 96 per cent against 4 per cent. South of latitude 380 the distribution is more uniform, as much rain falling in winter as in summer, with exception of the region of more abundant precipitation in...
